

WHAT CAN YOU HARVEST FROM THE ROOFTOP GARDEN?

A farm on the roof

Supermarkets and shopping malls often have large flat roofs. At the same time, cities have too little space to grow vegetables, so they have to be transported from far away. This has led some people to come up with the idea to grow vegetables on supermarket roofs and then sell them downstairs in the store. That means they don't have to be transported and are fresh on the shelves. The plants are supplied with collected rainwater and solar panels produce electricity for water pumps and lighting. It has only been tried on a few roofs so far, but maybe a farm like this will soon be growing on a supermarket near you?